Lauren Gadsby is a Registered Psychologist with a particular interest in neurodevelopmental assessments for children and adolescents, including autism, ADHD, cognitive and learning differences.

She believes assessments should go beyond a diagnosis, helping children and families better understand individual strengths, differences and support needs.

Lauren takes a warm, collaborative and neuroaffirming approach, supporting families to make sense of assessment findings and understand their child's unique profile. She enjoys identifying practical strategies and accommodations that support children with executive functioning, emotional regulation, sensory needs and learning differences across home, school and everyday life.

As a mum to two neurodivergent children, Lauren also brings personal experience of navigating assessments, diagnoses and the joys and challenges of parenting neurodivergent children.

Lauren is available from 30/11/26 for telehealth and in-person appointments at The Neurodiverse Network.
